

"SMART Communities Need A SMART Workforce"

eSports Workforce Training USA 2019-20

Pursuing a career in eSports is no more an odd choice considering the growth the sport is making. There are many people who are now making a living out of eSports by working in different fields within the industry.

eSports is a bigger industry does not involve only the players and organizers. There are many positions that you could take up in the eSports industry. There are opportunities to become a product manager, community manager, Shout cast/ Host, Journalist or Content creator, agent, pro gamer, referee or an event manager. What this implies is that virtually everyone can pursue a career in eSports.

But one does not just pursue a career in eSports without getting to know what the sports is really about, the duties of the various roles or portfolios or how to look out for jobs in the industry. These are the essentials one needs to before pursuing a career in eSports.

In order to pursue a career in eSports, one needs to what the sports is actually about. There are loads of information about the categories of games, competitions and organizing that one needs to read about before a pursuing a career in the industry.

Getting to know about the sports will give one a fair idea of what the sports is about and help create a solid foundation to pursue a career in eSports.

One of the most important things you need to know before pursuing a career in Sports is to identify what you want to do exactly. As indicated earlier, there are several jobs in the industry and thus it is incumbent on you to decide on what you want to do. eSports job industry resources are very helpful in identifying a job in the eSports industry that suits you perfectly.

Some of the jobs may require knowledge in a specific field before pursuing it. Roles such as the content creator or host may require one to have a journalistic background to be able to work effectively in that field. There are other roles such as statistician and lawyer which may require statistics and law background respectively. On the other hand, knowledge in the field such as pro gamers may be obtained as a result of constant individual practice.

After identifying your preferred job, it is imperative to know what the job entails. You only need not to know about the duties but also the timeliness and the demanding nature of it. This will help you decide whether or not you can work effectively in the field.

You need to know your weaknesses and not misrepresent yourself, you'll get caught out in the end and the games industry is pretty small! The games industry moves very fast so staying relevant is key. eSports companies hire people who are gamers with a good attitude, and people with traditional business backgrounds.

eSports companies can teach people skills but can't teach them a love and appreciation of gaming and a good work ethic – they need to bring that to the table themselves.

There are sources on the internet that give updates on the availability of jobs in the eSports industry. Most of the available jobs have information on roles and salary. One could have the opportunity to work as an intern or full-time employee.

There are several people who are proud to have chosen eSports as a career. Many of them knew about the sports and roles before pursuing it. Nearly everyone can pursue a career in eSports but a solid foundation needs to be built before.

Contact: info@SMARTEducationExchange.com